Can Academic Fraud Be Stopped?

Probably not – the incentives are too strong. Scholarly publishing is a $28 billion global industry, with misconduct at every level. But a few reformers are gaining ground. (Part two of two-part series on academic fraud)

Process Overview

The following outlines the steps involved in the ROL process.

ROL Process

Preliminary Recommendation

The Chair of the CQC will appoint a body to investigate the allegations and make a Preliminary Recommendation. The body will usually be the Conference Organization Integrity (COI) subcommittee of the CQC, but can also be an ad hoc body appointed by the CQC Chair that has a minimum of two CQC members on it. The investigation should involve the IEEE volunteers and OUs that are closest to the complaint, typically the senior volunteers of the IEEE OU that sponsored the conference. They will endeavor to understand the facts behind the complaint, which (if any) IEEE policies and procedures were not followed, and the degree of responsibility (if any) of the individuals and organizations involved. If fault is found, they will also recommend what actions should be taken, such as time on the ROL or mandatory training. Reasonable precautions against conflict of interest should be taken, and in particular, individuals suspected of misconduct should not be involved in the determination of fault or the actions that should be taken.

Given that many of the CQC subcommittees (especially the COI) investigate conference-related incidents and that there is a desire to avoid duplication of effort, a Preliminary Recommendation can also be an outcome of these CQC subcommittee investigations. In other words, CQC subcommittee investigations can be treated as a ROL investigation, provided that the CQC Chair approves and that appropriate processes are followed.
